Original publisher: Washington, DC : Division of Risk Analysis and Applications, Office of Nuclear Regulatory Research, U. S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 2001. OCLC Number: (OCoLC)240776779 Subject: Nuclear power plants -- Fires and fire prevention. Excerpt: . . . Introduction S Do actual fire incidents indicate the existence of any new phenomena that have not been considered in past PRAs In selecting the events included in this review a large number of fire events were considered. However, no attempt was made to ensure an exhaustive search of all fire incidents in any specific context (see Section 2. 2 for further discussion of the completeness of the selected incident set). Furthermore, no attempts have been made to perform statistical analyses of various fire PRA analysis parameters based on this review. While event reviews often take on these tasks, this was not the intent of this particular study. Rather, a select set of fire incidents was reviewed in order to glean insights into the completeness and validity of current PRA methods and assumptions. Each fire incident in the review set either involved a severe fire in the traditional context of fire protection, a fire that challenged nuclear safety, and or a fire that provides some specific insight into current fire PRA methods and assumptions. 1. 2 Organization of Report Section 2 provides a description of the methodology used in reviewing each fire incident. Section 3 identifies the incidents that were reviewed in this study. The insights gained from various incidents are given in Section 4. Final conclusions, summary of insights, and recommendations are presented in Section 5. Section 6 cites the referenced documents. Individual incident reviews are provided in Appendices 1-25 (both the Table of Contents...
