Excerpt: . . . eight paces in rear of the file-closers on the extreme left. Let everything be paid for out of my wages, remembering how you would prize the feeling of independence yourself. While I write, the drums are beating the dead-march to the playing of the band. Another, and the third since we came to Camp Benton, is carried to his last home, away from kindred, deprived of even a religious service, for the Chaplain is away. His company follow him to the grave, he is lowered to the rolling of muffled drums, earth falls on the coffin as eight comrades and a corporal fire three volleys over the grave, --and then leave him for the bright carelessness of life again. It sickens me to live in such an atmosphere. Man lives and dies like a brute. And now the company is marching back to the...
