A very amazing publication with perfect and lucid information. We have read through and that i am certain that i will planning to study once more yet again in the future. You will not really feel monotony at anytime of the time (that's what catalogues are for about should you question me).

Thomson⁴ refers both of these phenomena to a common cause, namely the emission by the incandescent solid of negatively charged particles, which may either impart a static charge to a neighboring insulated body, or may act as the carriers of a current between the incandescent cathode and any suitable anode. Determinations of the ratio of charge to mass in the case of these particles indicate that they are similar to those which constitute ordinary cathode rays.⁵ There are many points of similarity between the behavior of an incandescent cathode and that of a cathode of suitable material, such as zinc, when illuminated by ultra-violet light. At sufficiently high vacua true cathode rays appear to be developed in both cases. In one case these are due to the action of heat; in the other case to the action of short light waves. The experiments here described were suggested by this similarity between the two classes of phenomena. 1 A preliminary account of the work here described was presented to the Physical Society, Feb. 22, 1902.
