Deflection Board.--A device for determining the algebraic sum of the deflection corrections for wind, drift and travel of target during the time of flight and the predicted interval. It is used to determine the reference numbers for the deflection scale of the sight in Case I and II, and the azimuth correction reference number in Case III; and, for mortars, the corrected azimuth. Deflection Scale.--A scale provided on sights, graduated in degrees or mils for the purpose of laying the piece in direction or obtaining and applying correction for deflection. Degree.--One. three-hundred-and-sixtieth part of a circumference. Thus 90 degrees make a right angle. Delivery Table.--The hoist table from which the projectiles are delivered to the ammunition trucks. Density of Loading.--The ratio of the weight of the powder charge to the weight of a volume of distilled water at the temperature of maximum density (39.2 F.) which will fill the powder chamber. The formula for computing it is $A \text{ (density of loading)} = 27.68 \frac{w}{v}$, in which w is equal to the weight of the powder in pounds and v the volume of the chamber in cubic inches. Detonation.--An explosion in which the conversion takes place with rapidity producing a crushing or shattering effect. Deviations.--Divergences (or components thereof) with respect to the center of the target, of points or centers of impacts or of points where trajectories pierce a reference plane. Deviations should be differentiated from errors which are divergences of shots...
