Probably through a long stream of blood, but we must know that neither came as a matter of chance. The one was just as much a legacy as the other. Placing an inheritance is often difficult for the reason that it may be the result of complex causes and combined forces. Possibly no one in the preceding generations had red hair, but there must have been sufficient in the aggregate of that kind of pigment to produce one such head in the family. This same principle of transmission applies to the health, the brain and the morals of the descendants. The exact ailment of body or malady of mind may not be traceable to any one source, but it has been handed down. Ivegacie;-of money seem to fall in most cases to those who are already fortunate. This may be on the theory that To him that hath shall be given. Not so with the more enduring legacies of body and soul. Whether we will or no they come, and, like the dreaded bacteria, fix themselves in the most fertile soil. Where there is one weakness of body or mind another is the more apt to locate; hence, instead of having a general distribution of evil, it falls much more heavily in some places than in others. To no one source more than the conditions attendant upon pregnant women can the cause of physical or moral evil be traced....
